

Humpty: “Yummmmm”

For five years Americans have been fed a steady diet of false and misleading information from the biased news networks. Even the conservative news outlets should be considered biased, but with one big difference: they report stories that are accurate.

I have a degree in journalism and I used to watch CNN. A lot. But then I realized that their stories were filled with hate and bias that went beyond the news. They talk the talk but once I got away from CNN and started watching FOX, I was able to compare what I had been watching with CNN and having my eyes opened up with FOX. Granted, they too had their bias, but it became obvious that with each of their stories, which included data that contained videos and documents and personal testimonials. This data, in a lot of stories, actually came from the main stream media (MSM) itself. It took time but more recently investigations revealed just how inaccurate MSM was in their reporting. The MSM simply seemed to ignore these reports and NOT apologize or correct their stories. As journalists, this behavior is totally unacceptable.

I am a former radio announcer, from 300 years ago, and I seem to remember that radios stations and TV stations, I think, had to submit documents to the FCC that reflected the opinions of viewers that they were operating in the public's best interest at the time of their FCC license renewal. If this is correct, or at least it should be, I believe that this practice should be required for all stations to submit documents either supporting, or opposing, the station's effect on whether or not they are operating in the public's best interest before a station's license is renewed. I would think that many of the MSM stations would not be able to renew their license and personally, I would support them losing their license. When the MSM continues to lie to their viewers, they lie to ALL Americans.